Description

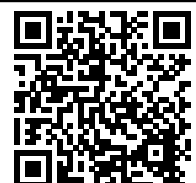

Description: A large spire flagon by John Newham of London, England; who worked 1699 - 1733. The flagon is inscribed to the front with a star (sun) containing IHS and a cross; under this is inscribed Kilsby 1726. Kilsby is a village and civil parish in the Daventry district of Northamptonshire, England. It is situated a short distance south of the border with Warwickshire approximately five miles southeast of Rugby. The flagon has a tapering cylindrical body on a large flared foot. There are bands of ovolo moulding just above the foot and also just below the upper handle terminal. The flagon has a double dome lid topped with a finial, it has an upright scroll thumbpiece. The handle is of a swan neck form. There are a partial set of makers hall marks and a touch mark inside the base. These flagons were for communion use in Churches. Note: A smaller version of this flagon is held in the collection of The Worshipful Company of Pewterers, and published as item number 114 of their collection. Condition: Excellent condition with a polished silver grey finish and some small traces of light oxide. Repairs: There are no repairs that I could detect. Size: Height to top of finial...
