Description

Some artists are painters' painters - highly appreciated by their peers - but here we have something still rare: at poets' painter. Pierre Charbonnier (1897-1978) was already described as such in 1928. André Salmon, the poet, art critic and one of the earliest defenders of cubism, describes Pierre Charbonnier as "rimbaudian". The writer elucidates that Charbonnier's love for poetry, made him seek out, and associate with poets from the youngest age. He became friends with, among others, René Crevel, Tristan Tzara, Max Jacob, Jacques Prévert, Blaise Cendrars and René Char. Charbonnier exhibited at the Salon des Tuileries from 1929. Pierre Charbonnier's creativity also led him to be an early cinematographer, creating decors and shooting short films from 1930 onwards. Notably, he worked with Robert Bresson and Jean Aurenche. The painting presented here is a rare oil on canvas from 1946, the end of the war. It features the artist's signature colour azure blue - much praised by André Salmon - and depicts a child with a birdcage. With a surrealist quality to it, the composition is modern, raw, poetic and lyrical all at once. Our painting is unsigned, but titled and dated b...
