Description

A generously sized hand stitched Durham quilt reversing from a clear green to a buttery yellow cotton sateen. The quilting design is traditional with a large flower radiating from the centre, surrounded by loops, roundels and a deep scrolled and wavy border. This quilt was part of the "bottom drawer" of a Victorian young lady, i.e. a collection of household items gathered together in preparation for her marriage: the fact that this quilt is unused leads to conjecture. The condition of the quilt is excellent, the only mark is a very faint fold line on the green side where it has been stored. A great piece of North country history that would be ideal as a bedcover or a throw. c. 1890 93" x 85" (236 cm x 216 cm)
