Description

This impressive pair of Georgian oak Corinthian columns more than likely supported a portico or stood either side of a doorway in the 18th Century. This idea, of possibly being situated close to a wall or structure, would explain why the finely carved detailing is limited to three sides of the gilded capitals and peters out towards the reverse of the columns. The columns and capitals have been made from solid oak and could support a substantial weight. As you would expect, there are signs of previous restoration - we would be happy to undertake any conservation work required under the direction of their future owner. The measurements for these slightly tapering columns (not including carved capitals) diameter of base - approx. 25.5 cm / diameter of top 19 cm / height - 1.83 metres. The measurements for their carved capitals - widest point 46 cm / height 28 cm. Overall height (Inc. Capitals) 2.11 metres.
