Charles Martin Powell (1775-1824) C.M. Powell was born in Chichester. He was a seaman; this gave him a good knowledge of ships and the sea. He was a self-taught artist. Powell achieved a high level of achievement. He exhibited at both the Royal Academy and the British Institution. The clarity in the drawing of his ships and the detail of his figures were two of his most notable trademarks. While he painted in the 19th century, Powell's work has a distinctly 18th century feel about it. Powell adopted the Dutch style for many of his paintings. This and his obvious knowledge of Dutch coastal vessels suggests he had a connection with the area at some stage in his life. Powell's paintings always have depth and feeling, and his seas and ships feature an almost three-dimensional aspect. Many of his works...
