Description

British School, early 19th century, an interesting and naive vernacular allegorical scene with storm clouds symbolically gathering overhead, possibly depicting a cuckolded nobleman or royal personage asleep on a chair, a noble woman (perhaps his wife) in conversation with another nobleman wearing a Tam O' Shanter who appears to be holding a phial of sleeping draught, both men wearing chivalric orders on their breasts. Oil on canvas. Restored and re-lined, within an old, sympathetically aged frame. 64cm x 52cm including frame (canvas size 55cm x 42cm)
