Description

A fabulous late 17th century enclosed dresser base, consisting of five geometric drawers in a T-shaped formation with the bottom one being a false drawer and a pair of cupboards either side. The drawers have heavy mouldings which make up wonderful geometric designs and the doors being more simply refined with a fielded panels. All drawers and doors retain their original turned knobs and brass escutcheons, the brass hinges on the doors are however later replacements as this is a common feature with dressers and cupboards of this period. The dresser has had some minor restorations, some of the back panels have been replaced and probably during the 19th century, commensurate with age. Overall this is a superb piece of 17th century English furniture with a wonderful rich patina, and it is in excellent condition.
