Description

A 19th century French tapestry four panel room divider of large proportions depicting trees, foliage and a river with a distant mountainous landscape and chateau. The tapestry colours have faded throughout as is usual however some small pieces of colour remain, most notably to the flowers. The screen shows wear commensurate with age, particularly to the extremities where some fraying is apparent, but nonetheless the divider remains an attractive piece with no losses to the tapestry itself. All panels open and close with ease and the screen fully folds down to the width of one panel if needed.
