Date of manufacture: 19th Century

Description

An extremely well made early 19th century fishing line drier. A wonderful colour and patination. The central core is metal and the ends have been modelled on the shape of a fishing reel. Could be an estate made piece. The drier attaches to a pole then the drier can be rotated to allow the line to be wound on to it to dry. A really super item to add to a collection of antique fishing items.
