Description

This is a charming clock with a very welcoming appearance. A George III period, stained pine, hooded wall alarm timepiece. The unsigned, late 18th century, thirty hour duration, four pillar weight driven movement with Anchor Recoil escapement regulated by seconds pendulum. Also having an alarm mechanism set between the plates next to the going train incorporating a verge crown-wheel and vertically pivoted hammer, sounding on a bell mounted above. The 7 inch square brass dial with central rose engraved alarm disc and single scroll pierced hour hand to centre, within applied Roman numeral chapter ring with dot half hour markers and rococo scroll cast spandrels to angles. The case with moulded cornice and plain frieze over hinged glazed dial aperture flanked by free-standing columns, the right hand side with lancet-shaped door and both sides with shaped bargeboards at the rear, the throat with complex mouldings over twin stepped-ogee outline integral side supports with inverted break-arch pendant backboard between. This wall clock is absolutely charming and has a substantial slow tick. The dial has not been prepared because it may be preferred to leave it in its dull and...
