Description

This is quite simply one of the most interesting pieces I have ever had in. It is a genuine 18th century French oak mortuary table. This really should be in a museum. This came a private collection in the North of France and is a talking point in any home! It is made entirely of oak and as you can imagine is very heavy. The patina to the wood is superb and gives this table plenty of character to add to its interesting history. If you are brave enough this could be used as a rustic dining table. It may benefit from a glass top but I will leave that upto you. If you don't fancy hosting family parties around this piece then as a substantial console table would able be a suitable use for this exceptional piece. No faults, just character and quality.
