Description

A fine painting by the Austrian artist Albert Meindl (1891 - 1967) that beautifully conveys the heat of the Mediterranean sun and instantly transports you to warmer climes. Albert, known for his expressive style and choice of palette, has used his talents to the full in this depiction of villagers beside the Amalfi Coast - we cannot be sure of its location but the consensus of opinion is overwhelmingly in favour of this area. What makes this painting particularly appealing is its charming subject matter, broad and spontaneous execution, and the fact that it's one of only a fairly small number of larger canvases produced by this artist. Until recently this artwork formed part of a private collection, so as far as we know it has not been recorded as being previously offered for sale at auction. The canvas is displayed within its original ebonised frame and the painting is currently in a very good unrestored condition - however, within the price stated we will carry out the small amount of restoration work required. Measurements of frame - 69 cm x 82 cm For size of the canvas see measurements below.
