Description

Edwardian inlaid mahogany display cabinet. This Edwardian inlaid mahogany display cabinet was made in the Edwardian period known as the 'Age of elegance' circa 1900. This cabinet is a fine example of the period. It is a breakfront with a central door that opens to allow you to get into the cabinet where it has the 2 glass shelves. Unusually, the shelves are edged in a brass frame, the interior is also lined in a beautiful green watered silk. Under the glass cabinet are 3 mahogany lined drawers all with their original brass handles. It stands on elegant turned legs with fine carving, that are joined by a platform and with turned feet. To each side of the glazed door are concave panels of glass that again add to this cabinet's obvious quality and class. Imagine owning this Edwardian inlaid mahogany display cabinet. And the enjoyment of not only having this wonderful piece of furniture but also how special it will make your collection look. Dimensions 122cms wide 48ins 38cms deep 15ins 178.5cms high 70 1/4ins.
