Description

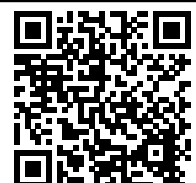

Pair of early 19th century watercolours by Robert Richard Scanlan (1801-1876) who was an Irish artist who specialised in portrait groups illustrating the humour in Irish society. This pair of watercolours shows men in a tavern and paying particular attention to their faces. Very skilfully executed and full of Irish humour. Housed in the original frames and mounts, there are signs of yellowing commensurate with age, however, the paintings themselves are in good condition. Signed and dated 1838 and 1840. R.R. Scanlan's works have become very collectable and sadly hard to come by. The actual watercolours measure 21cm X 27cm. Framed they measure 33.5cm x 43cm. We can deliver free of charge in UK mainland and can calculate the cost for international delivery on request. Payment by bank transfer or PayPal. Robert Richard Scanlan (1801-1876), sometimes known as R. R. Scanlan, was an Irish painter and portraitist. A resident of Dublin in the 1820s, he exhibited portraits at the Royal Hibernian Academy (1826-1864), and was later Master of the Cork School of Design.[1] He painted portraits and watercolour portrait groups, described by Professor Anne Crookshank of Trinit...
