Description

We are delighted to offer this stunning Imperial Russian 'Plique a Jour' & 'Champleve' silver enamel spoon made in Moscow c.1890 by an unidentified silversmith A.K. This spoon features an array of desirable Russian craftsmanship; the reverse side of the spoon features a stunning 'Champlevé' enamel design in which the silver is engraved and enamel is 'filled in' resulting in a smooth finish (unlike cloisonné which is protruding). In addition to the Champleve, this spoon's bowl is magnificently embellished with Plique-a-jour. This part of the spoon is made translucent with stained glass-like enamelling which allows light to pass through and is splendid to see on a sunny day. The handle features a beautiful twisted design with further intricate enamelling at the terminal. The spoon displays the excellence of Imperial Russian craftsmanship and design in such a 'simple' object as a single spoon. The spoon is marked with the maker's mark A.K, and the assay master mark AP combined with the Moscow town and 88 Zolotniks mark.
