Description

This superb and finely detailed Victorian carved oak figure group humorously depicts three monks. The first is of small stature and has a confident expression whilst reading from a very large important looking book which is laid on the lectern. The next is waiting his turn to read. He is much taller and is carrying a very small and less significant looking book and he has a concerned expression. The third one has no book but seems to be enjoying the rivalrous tensions between his fellows. This most unusual piece is brilliantly carved and executed in solid English oak and is signed by the carver on the reverse V Geld and dates to circa 1870. It has good mellow colour and rich patination.
