Description

This is a unique opportunity to acquire an Early Flemish Genre late 17th / 18th century oil painting on wooden panel in the baroque style, depicting peasants smoking and drinking in a tavern or ale house. - This exceptional example we offer is typical of many interior scenes painted by artists in the manner of old master artist David Teniers The Younger who was held in high esteem by many followers of his work and who were greatly influenced by his style and manner during the 17th century baroque era. The painting is well aged and full of charm and character and has been presented in a later frame. The 3rd image X-rays through the surface grime to reveal in black and white much more of the fainter underlying detail from when first painted. - [Follower Of] David Teniers The Younger 1610-1690 David Teniers was the most famous 17th-century painter of peasant life. He enjoyed international popularity in his own lifetime and during the 18th century, especially in France. Teniers's success was marked by the acquisition of a country house in 1662 and by the grant in 1680 of a patent of nobility. His work was imitated by many followers, including his son, David Teniers III. - ...
