Description

Antique mahogany twin pillar dining table This Antique mahogany twin pillar dining table was made circa 1900 using fine period timber from redundant tables. At this time there were countless old tables with the finest timbers around, that the cabinetmakers could choose to use to make these fantastic dining tables. They would then construct fine pillar bases to compliment the wonderful rich mahogany tops. All the best trees had been felled during the Georgian period and sadly had not been replanted. Therefore, the cabinetmakers could use this dense timber instead of the less dense mahogany available around 1900. It stands on the pair of pillars with the fluted triple splay legs with the cast brass toes with rolling castors below. The top with the square ends and rounded corners that takes the 2 extra leaves. You can use this table with no leaves, one extra leaf or both leaves to suit your dining requirements. As it has a square end you may sit 2 people at each end comfortably. Imagine entertaining your family and friends and the great pleasure ownership will bring you.
