Description

A Staffordshire flat back mantle figure of the notorious 18th century highwayman and associate of Dick Turpin, Tom King - also known as 'The Gentleman Highwayman' here he can be found dressed like a dandy in a striking cobalt blue jacket and yellow breeches on his white horse, pistol in hand ready to relieve another traveller of their trinkets! The figure dates to around 1870 and is bright and attractive with the soft gilding of the era, but he does also show the signs of his considerable age with some crazing, a firing crack to the reverse and some paint losses - I've included a wealth of images so that you can study him in detail. Tom King stands 23cm high, 29cm across and 6cm deep - please don't hesitate to get in touch if I can provide any further information or photographs.
