Description

A large oil on canvas by Stella Steyn, typically a still life of daffodils, hyacinths and fruits, a stunning composition by this Irish artist whose work is enjoying recognition again after a long absence away from the art scene until her death in 1987. In good condition, the loose canvas framed and glazed in a simple light oak frame. Acquired from a descendant's collection, the work circa 1950. Stella Steyn 1907 – 1987 Born in Dublin to émigré parents who had moved to Limerick in the 1870s from Eastern Europe, she was educated at Alexandra's College and later at the Dublin Metropolitan School of Art. Like other contemporary artists, Evie Hone and Mainie Jellett, Steyn travelled to Paris in the 1926 to study, accompanied by her mother and fellow artist Hilda Roberts. While there she enrolled in the Académie Scandinave, an art school run by Swedish, Norwegian and Danish artists housed in the former studio of Jean Antoine Watteau and later at La Grande Chaumière, another school set up by a Swiss artist Martha Settler. Similar to the Académie Colarossi, it was established as an alternative to the strict, and quite conservative education practices of the official École-des-Be...
