Description

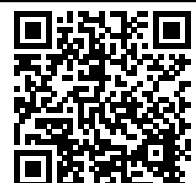

A very large and beautiful painting depicting the work of Sir Edwin Landseer. Entitled "Time of Peace.", this 19th Century Oil on canvas would have been copied from the original which was destroyed in 1928 when the Thames flooded the National Gallery, Millbank, where the picture was on display. We found this painting in a poor state and had it professionally cleaned and relined. The beautifully gilded wood and gesso frame had been over painted and that was also restored. The result is extraordinary and truly reflects the mastery of Sir Edwin Landseer. Framed the painting measures W 143cm X H107cm The canvas measures W 112cm X H76cm Landseer (1802 - 1873) was a notable figure in 19th-century British art, and his works can be found in Tate Britain, the Victoria and Albert Museum, Kenwood House and the Wallace Collection in London. He also collaborated with fellow painter Frederick Richard Lee. Landseer's popularity in Victorian Britain was considerable, and his reputation as an animal painter was unrivalled. Much of his fame – and his income – was generated by the publication of engravings of his work, many of them by his brother Thomas. His appeal crossed class bound...
