Description

A fine example of a late 18thc wrought iron candle holder / flambeau....a flambeau burns tallow-soaked plant fibre as opposed to a peerman which is for clamping and burning a splint of wood, such as fir.....but in this case if you look at the ring and spring at the end of the arm you will see it is more suitable for burning a flambeau, as a splint will not burn in a vertical position... the scrolled feet and profile are a continental feature found mostly in France. French C1780-C1800.
