Description

Edwardian inlaid serpentine display cabinet. This Edwardian inlaid serpentine display cabinet was made circa 1900. It would have been made in a prestige London workshop, Edwards and Roberts were renowned for this style and quality of cabinet. They were experts using fine marquetry work on such pieces in this era. Using designs from Robert Adams book of designs, they would use these on these wonderful crisp items of furniture. The display cabinet is serpentine shaped, the top section with the serpentine glass panels and a central door that opens to allow you access to your precious collection. The mahogany selected for this was also the finest quality. The base has 2 drawers, each fitted with its original cast brass swing handles. Standing on tapering legs with spade feet, and a full platform under that also provides a display area. Imagine the wow factor this will bring to your home and the many admiring glances and conversations it will spark, as well as the perfect display for your items. 122cms wide 48ins 201cms high 79ins 43cms deep 17ins.
