Description

A tavern drop dial wall clock in a solid, heavy, flame mahogany case with a fully restored movement by Smith & Sons of Walton dating the clock 1865-1890. The Movement An an eight-day time and hour strike which sounds the number at each hour on a top bell. This movement has two large weights to drive it over eight days and has been fully restored and a new gut added by myself so is running strongly over the eight days via the original pendulum. The case Stands at 62" top to toe with a width of 23" at the widest point and a depth of 10". It is made of solid flame mahogany and comes with the original front glass door, which slides off. The case has been well waxed over the years and offered in great condition, almost wet to look at. . The Dial 14" in steel, the dial is 100% original and has never been touched up. Now showing a little sign of age but still very clear, showing the maker's name Smith & Sons of Walton. The original hands are still present.. These clocks are becoming increasingly desirable and as such prices are rising to match demand, making this clock a very sound investment. A large piece of top quality; this will make a bold and impressive statement in any...
