Description

This is an antique serpentine console table. An English, mahogany reception hall, side or vestibule table, dating to the early Victorian period, circa 1840. Exceptional serpentine forms offer a truly distinctive appeal. Displays a desirable aged patina and in very good order. Select stocks present fine grain interest and alluring russet hues. Low profile, wall-mount form perfect for the entrance hall or an alcove beside a fireplace. The sinuous chamfered table edge falls away gracefully, sitting proud of the serpentine apron below. Canted corners sit atop the oblique knees, accentuated here with scrolled flourishes and carved motif. Superb cabriole legs decorated with elaborate scrolled toes in the classical French manner. This is a striking antique serpentine console table, the expressive forms and detail a hallmark of the early Victorian age in furniture craftsmanship. Solid joints and construction, delivered waxed, polished and ready for the home.
