Light craquelure throughout the work. Painting has been cleaned ready to hang Claude Lorraine Ferneley (1822-1891) A member of the renowned family of painters which included his father, the significant sporting artist John E Ferneley. Born in Melton Mowbray, Claude remained there for his entire life and he was given his name in recognition of his godfather Claude Loro who was a patraine Smith to sporting artists and squire of Enderby. Claude's father gave him instruction in painting and his influence is clearly discernible in his son's work. Claude assisted his father on some paintings occasionally, perhaps more than did his siblings, but this was mainly restricted to working up the backgrounds and John Ferneley issued invoices commensurate with this practice, charging less for the work that his son had undertaken.
