Description

This is an absolutely huge and wonderful ejector chamber stick in full working order - in fact, I have never seen one this size before (it's taller than a bottle of wine!), so it really is a rare piece. Called an 'ejector' candlestick due to the mechanism on the side that pushes out and 'ejects' the old candle stumps, this one dates one from the late 19th century, and really would make a fantastic centre piece in any home. The chamber stick is 34cm high, and 30 across the tray with the handle making it 35 cm across. It displays the gentle surface wear that would be expected from a used and well loved item of this age - please see the photographs, and if I can provide any further information or images, please do not hesitate to get in touch. Please note that it takes larger candles than the usual dining sized ones - the top opening being 3.5cm across. Please don't hesitate to get in touch if I can provide any further information.
