Description

1 Impressive British Victorian 19th Century Military Oil Painting Portrait Of A Red Coat Soldier In Red Tunic Uniform. Subject front portrait half length view of a military British red coat 19th century soldier who is wearing his smart regimental military red with brass buttoned tunic uniform. He has blue eyes, having slender features a thin moustache with dark brown combed curly hair and rosy cheek complexion looking slightly to the left of the viewer. The colour red he is wearing signifies that he is representing the Royal Crown. A good easy to display in any home compact size being 40cm high and 35 cm width of the frame. Red coat, also referred to as redcoat or scarlet tunic, was a military garment which was widely (though not exclusively) used by the infantry units of the British military, including the British Army and Royal Marines, from the 16th to 19th centuries. The garment was also widely used by the British Colonial Auxiliary Forces and the British Indian Army during the 18th and 19th centuries. Though by the 20th centuries the red coat was abandoned for practical duties in favour of khaki by all British and Commonwealth military units, it continues to be used...
