Description

A Very Good Quality Georgian, 18th Century, Mahogany Oval Pembroke Table, Having Well Figured Top With Two Drop Flaps And Crossbanded Decoration, Over One Frieze Drawer Opposed By One False Drawer To Reverse With Replacement Brass Handles, Raised On Elegant Square Tapered Legs And Replacement Brass Castors. Pembroke tables became one of the most popular pieces of furniture around the mid 18th century due to their versatility and plethora of different uses. In fact George Hepplewhite himself actually described Pembroke tables as the most useful of tables and many references can be found to them in the literature of the time with people such as Jane Austen even describing them being used for dining at, or having papers kept in them for use as a writing table. There is even references to them in other literature as tables which ladies used for taking part in embroidery at. It is certain that they are incredibly versatile even in today's world and can be used for many, many different purposes. The ability to use the two flaps to create a significant variation in the size of the table top surface is an incredibly useful and functional feature. This particular pembroke table ...
