Description

Victorian oak draw leaf dining table This Victorian oak draw leaf dining table was made circa 1890 in a high-end workshop to a commission. The Victorian oak table has a carved cup and cover bulbous support to each corner, that joins to the double Y stretcher with the central bar. The solid oak framed double boarded rectangular top, that has a leaf each end that easily draws out (hence draw leaf table) from under the table top to increase the tables size and seating capacity. The frieze is wonderfully carved with the grape and vine design, a feature that also showed the wealth of the owner as even in these times having items carved was a very expensive procedure. Obviously owning such a table was again a sign of the owner's wealth and success to show to his family and friends when entertaining. Using the grape and vine was still using the influence of Grinling Gibbons master carving of 100 years prior, who used this and other natural products in his designs. Imagine this impressive table in your home and the pleasure you will get as you entertain your family and friends. The colour and patina are stunning and you will not be able to resist running your hand over its surface...
