Description

This is an ironstone vase, produce of Miles Mason, in pink and purple colours with different non-repetitive designs on all sides. Dated to c. 1810 Extremely rare example. The vase has a baluster shape with two ogre head handles on either side of the neck. The main central section of the vase has two different chinoiserie influenced patterns on opposite sides. Miles Mason, born in 1752, inherited Richard Farrar's retail business, through marriage to Farrar's daughter Ruth in 1782, located at 131 Fenchurch Street, London, and as a prominent member of trade companies he rose to become master of the Glass Sellers Company in 1793. Along with glass, Mason's Stock included Chinese Export porcelain imported solely through the East India Company. The East India Company ceased importation of Oriental porcelain circa 1792 due in part to a rise in importation taxes or duties. Miles, along with the other London retailers, sought stock from the British pottery industry. Mason began manufacturing wares in his own right in the main from his workshops at Lane Delph, Staffordshire. The porcelain wares produced were often intentionally decorated in the manner of the Chinese Export wares wi...
