Description

Edwardian satinwood painted Carlton House desk This Edwardian satinwood hand-painted Carlton House desk was made circa 1900. Owning this wonderful piece from the Edwardian age of elegance is bound to give you so much pleasure. Imagine the original home and the elegant Edwardian lady sitting at this as she wrote her daily diary entries or letters to her friends and families who were spread around Great Britain and to all parts of the globe. Carlton House desks were the inspiration of Hepplewhite and the first one was made for the then Prince of Wales (later to become George IV) and named after his Palace Carlton House. This superb example is smaller than the original but is of the same shape and form. It is like a writing table with the U-shaped fitting to the rear, fitted multiple drawers, and bowed cupboards, that open to reveal open storage, as well as the compartments with the serpentine lifting lids. The desk stands on tapering legs and 3 drawers around the knee-hole. It is beautifully decorated with delicate hand-painted floral swags and vignettes to the top and to the rear. Imagine the absolute pleasure you will have owning this outstanding piece of Edwardian furnit...
