Description

Here is an intricately carved wooden architectural corbel from the Indian Subcontinent, dating to the 19th century or possibly earlier. Carved in Teak and extremely heavy, it's a great decorative item and would look striking in any home. There is a hanging hole now fashioned on the back so that it can be hung, but it would work just as well as a bookend, or a stand to display candles etc. The corbel is a riot of floral decoration and tendrils, amongst borders of petals and carved studs. I have another similar corbel listed, so if you were to want to purchase the pair, I would offer a discount for the two. Please don't hesitate to get in touch if I can provide any further information. I offer free delivery to mainland UK and am happy to help with quotes for shipping abroad.
