Description

This pretty wool rug was probably woven by Afshari weavers, an ancient nomadic tribe, around the city of Kirman in South-East Persia at the beginning of the 20th century. It has a cotton foundation with fine handspun wool and a very fine weave. The colours are very soft and well matched. The design has great tribal character with an ivory diamond medallion that is decorated with a tribal gul, surrounded by other geometric ornaments. Note the lovely spandrels with repeating diamonds in blue, and the very pretty ivory stylised floral borders. The whole composition is very delightful, and has both a charming naivete in the drawing whilst being quite formal. This lovely rug has survived the generations in very good condition, with original selvages and ends and a soft velvety pile.
