Description

A rare survivor of the English King William III period and being of exceptional appearance. The 30 hour duration posted movement with Anchor Recoil escapement and countwheel striking the hours on a top-mounted, cast bell. Having 'Lantern clock' style brass rear pillars and flat front pillars to accept the dial feet. The early style pinion arbors are not colletted but are flanged to mount the wheels. The movement has iron top and bottom plates. Behind only a 9" square brass dial with a finely matted centre and fire-gilded, cast brass, winged putti corner spandrels. The silvered, engraved and wax-filled brass chapter ring has tall Roman hour numerals within double-track ring borders and elaborated 'cruciform' half hour markings. The inner portion has a divided quarter track with conforming border. It is signed across the bottom to either side of the numeral VI "Wm. Noke Fecit" The single steel hand is pierced and tailed. Contained in a plain oak case of considerable weight and hardness and of rich colour and patina. The flat overhang top is above a frieze with a blind fret to the front which in turn, sits upon an overhanging moulding over the hood door. The door is glazed...
