Description

This antique oak house keeper's cupboard is a fabulous design piece, that dates back to the 17th century, specifically to the 1670-80s, its origins are Flemish . This piece is perfect for interior decorators who are looking to make a statement . This cupboard features an incredibly rare design theme, with the door panels adorned with eight-pointed stars, making it a unique and special addition to any room . The cupboard is sturdy and entirely functional, standing on bun feet, making it a practical and beautiful storage solution. This imposing cupboard is a rare find that has survived over 300 years in good antique condition, displaying expected signs of age and use, including some later repairs. The hinges have been replaced, but overall, the piece is in very good antique condition , although not 100% perfect . The eight-pointed stars decorating the doors of the cupboard are fascinating and carry significant meaning in various cultures worldwide. In Buddhism, Hinduism, Gnostics, Judeo-Christian, Egyptian, Babylonian, and Wiccans, among others, the eight-pointed star symbolises a way to open our eyes and see beyond the material world, exploring spiritual values.
