Description

This beautiful late 19th-century oil painting by British artist Henry Hadfield Cubley (1858-1934) depicts an extensive view in Matlock Bath, Derbyshire. From our elevated vantage point, the majestic rolling scenery extends towards a distant wood. While above, the heavy clouds break to reveal cracks of bright light, which illuminate patches of verdant pasture. A mother and daughter amble towards a quaint cottage - the fire's aglow, it's a cosy retreat. In 1888, Cubley moved to Matlock Bath with his wife Julia and the pair had two daughters, Gladys and Kathleen. Kathleen was around six years old when he produced this work, so perhaps that's her in the white bonnet. Did you know? During the Victorian era, visitors flocked to picturesque Matlock for its spa waters. It became known for its colourful buildings and was dubbed 'Little Switzerland' by Lord Byron. Signed/dated lower left and held within its original gilt frame.
