Description

A finely cast pair of gilt-bronze five branch wall lights / wall appliques in the early 18th Century Regence style by Eugene Hazard, (1838-1891) Paris French Paris made - Circa 1870 These fine Paris-made wall lights feature five finely-cast acanthus decorated branches of serpentine form with bell shaped nozzles and further acanthus decoration to the drip pans. The arms issue from exceptionally well cast satyr mask back plates. The quality of finishing and gilding are extremely high throughout with a wonderful rich gilt patina. Top branches engraved 'E Hazard'. Eugène Hazard A bronzier of great repute, Eugene Hazard was registered as a sculptor and manufacturer of bronzes in Paris in the 17th arrondissement. He was the son of Pierre Louis Hazard, sculptor in Paris (1805-1868) and Marie Françoise Désirée Laffond(1812-1861). He specialised in reproducing the great French designs of the 18th century for a new audience and these wall lights are certainly in the Régence style. That having been said, we have been unable to locate a precise 18th century comparative for these pieces so they may have been taken from an 18th century printed source instead. Hazard's name is on...
