Description

Here is a superb example of a Victorian Country House extending brass floor lamp by renowned lamp maker Thomas Messenger. Extremely heavy and imposing standing at 1 metre 50cm tall, and over 2 metres tall when fully extended, this converted oil lamp has been fully restored and rewired by an antique lighting specialist. The lamp has a strong square base standing on four stylised animal paws, with stepped fluted moulding leading to an intricate finial and the fluted column with detailed collars. At the top is a central cradle holding a brass orb which originally stored the oil, and now houses the lamp fitting. I am offering the lamp in a polished condition as this is how the lamp had been kept by its previous owner, however having had a full clean, if desired this could fade back to an even matt tarnished finish over a period of time if that is the look that you prefer. You are very welcome to have the lamp shade in the photos free of charge - this is just a modern one that I bought to take the photos with. The lamp is in excellent condition as I hope the photographs illustrate, but does have the surface wear that you would expect of a piece of this age, so please do...
